The Station Agent features exquisite nickeling which is a unique feature on a potbelly stove. The nickeling absolutely sparkles, and the detailing in the nickeling on all of the front doors is marvelous. A large cooklid rests on the extra large top. This reliable heater takes a 22 inch stick of wood and can heat a good-sized room or area all night long. An ash cleanout box located in the ash cleanout area at the base of the stove is a convenient feature. The Station Agent beautifully combines the refined decorative detailing often found on other stove styles with the vintage and historic charm of a potbelly stove.

The Station Agent was manufactured for the railroad companies in order to heat the railroad stations and offices. There were a number manufacturers who made identical stoves. They were sold through hardware stores and stove dealers. This potbelly stoves was designed to burn both wood. It is built of solid cast-iron and it is equipped with what is called a mushroom top with a 12inch diameter lid. The stove includes shaker grates below. This is a very powerful heater and designed the largest of areas for long period of time.
